

INWAC to Sponsor Aerospace Expo

INWAC (Inland Northwest Aerospace Consortium) is sponsoring an advanced Manufacturing, Materials, and Aerospace expo entitled Inland AM* Expo to connect active buyers with area manufacturers. This is the third year that this expo has run. INWAC also plans on increasing awareness about their shifted mission and goal to increase membership in their association.

This association will better serve members by focusing on the needs of individual manufacturers, as well as the whole of the aerospace manufacturing industry in the Inland Northwest area. This will be accomplished by illustrating the benefits of utilizing local business, increased efficiency creating more competitive cost for parts, and decreasing shipping time and costs to large aerospace companies.

INWAC is a non-profit alliance of local aerospace manufacturers that focuses on bringing aerospace commerce to the Inland Northwest, while acting as a liaison between small manufacturers and large aerospace companies.

INWAC is striving to create a coalition of connections in the Inland Northwest in order to generate commerce in the area for aerospace manufacturing. Generating business locally is beneficial for both local companies as well as for large companies. INWAC is working with original equipment manufacturers to show the benefits of utilizing local business to manufacture aerospace items. These benefits include proximity, price, stimulating the local economy, as well as decreasing the cost of combining products to produce the larger piece.

Overall, the Inland AM* Expo constructs connections with area manufacturers and interested buyers. This follows INWAC's goals for area aerospace manufacturers and forms a coalition that partners organizations with manufacturers to increase business connections and create a more competitive market.
